My favorite place would have to be at school for a couple of reasons. One of those reason is that there are so many people around to meet and become friends with. Talking has always been one of my favorite things to do and I can practice it a lot when I'm in school. There are always people hanging around that having nothing better to do but talk. However, talking in the hallway is not the only place to meet new people. There are plenty of friendly people in each of the classes that I am taking and Broward Community College's Downtown Center. I used to have trouble going up to people and starting a conversation, but now it is like second nature to me.

When I was in high school, at Flanagan High, however, it was easier to meet people. One reasons for that is that there were more people there and I was there for longer. I hope that by the time I'm finished at BCC to have met as many people as I did in high school. It is harder to meet people in college as compared to high school, because in high school, I spent the whole day there, and so it was always possible to meet and keep friendships with more people because we all had school on the same days.

In college, I feel I have less freedom. Most people think that in college they have more freedom because they can go about their lives as they so choose to. However, since I don't have a car, I can't stay around after a class for very long to talk to anybody so it is the complete opposite of freedom for me. Also, since in college I don't have classes everyday, it gives me less time to talk to and meet new people. However, I still enjoy going to school and meeting as many people as I can.

School, besides being a good social place, is a good place to find out more about myself and to figure out what I want to do for the rest of my life. It is a place that I will use as a stepping stone in my quest to make millions, possibly learning a thing or two along the way. But seriously, I have always liked school because I have always liked learning. I would like to major in History and to become a high school teacher. At least at this point, I would choose high school because that is what I'm familiar with, but I could always change to college, as it becomes second nature to me.

I believe that socializing in education is the only way to get people to be interested in their topic, and to start discussion about a subject or to even do group work. Talking is something that most people like to do, so by having a class discussion, it is actually tricking people into learning, which is always good because then people feel more at ease while the education process is at work. School has always been one of my favorite places to be because we are able to communicate our ideas there and to pick up some new ones. Talking with friends in class is vital to a good education because otherwise a person can feel alone or singled out and not be able to fully concentrate on learning, which is the reason for being in school. I hope to continue my trek toward learning as I continue through Broward Community College and beyond.
